I want to create a simple website centered around the theme of "gaming". I love games so I believe that creating a website around that would give me the motivation I need to finish within the given time frame. All pages will definitely have a black background with a navigation menu at the top which will stay consistent. If possible I want to decorate the nav with a pixel outline. I still haven't decided on the colors that I will use, however I do want to use a really black and red. The main page will contain an animation of pong where a ball will keep bouncing between 2 rectangles. Below the animation I want to add famous quotes that come from the game industry meaning they could be from a game or from someone in real life who said it regarding games. The quotes could be coded with jquery so that they switch to a new quote once you click on them. The other 2 pages will be much more simple as one will be about gaming consoles and the other one will be about games that I love. Both pages will be created using a grid to keep it simple where I will have a picture of the game console or game and below it there will be a brief text about it. I will probably hide the text and reveal it using Javascript to make it look clean and interactive. The images will have an outline which needs to expand together with the text to cover it and convey that feeling that it goes together with the text. Lastly, for the fonts I definitely want to use a pixel style font, however, if I am unable to find another font that matches well, then I could abandon that idea.
